

Hard Work

“Talent is cheaper than table salt. What separates the talented individual from the successful one is a lot of hard work.” ~Stephen King

We’ve heard it since childhood. We’ve heard it from parents, teachers, and friends: “You just have to stick with it and try (work) harder.” Success is more a combination of how hard we are willing to work or practice than the God-given talents we are born with.

Hard work has clearly paid off for the most successful people.

Take Bill Gates... As one of the richest men in the world, he evidently never slept, never changed clothes, never did anything but code and maneuver and strategize. For Bill Gates, it was the ability to have access to a computer and log 10,000 hours of programming time. Gates didn’t seem like a shoe-in for success after dropping out of Harvard and starting a failed first business called Traf-O-Data with Microsoft co-founder Paul Allen. This early idea didn’t work out, but Gates’s later work did, creating the global empire that is Microsoft. In an industry filled with incredibly smart people – where smart was and is commonplace – he rose to the top by also working incredibly hard.

For The Beatles, it was playing 1,200 one-hour live shows to smaller audiences that would prepare them for stadium concerts and super stardom.

Or take sports... Tom Brady, quarterback for the New England Patriots, probably spends more time just watching film than the rest of us spend at work. In a sport filled with incredibly talented athletes – where incredible athletic talent is commonplace – he’ll one day be in the Hall of Fame because he works incredibly hard.

Today, Disney rakes in billions from merchandise, movies, and theme parks around the world, but Walt Disney himself had a bit of a rough start. He was fired by a newspaper editor because “he lacked imagination and had no good ideas.” After that, Disney started a number of businesses that didn’t last too long and ended with bankruptcy and failure. He kept plugging along, (working harder) however, and eventually found a recipe for success that worked.

While Ford is known today for its innovative assembly line and American-made cars, Henry Ford wasn’t an instant success. In fact, his early businesses failed and left him broke five times before he founded the successful Ford Motor Company.

All are examples of very talented individuals. But the common theme is taking that talent and supporting it with a fierce and committed work ethic. It sounds tough and sounds like a lot of hard work. Well, don’t kid yourself, it is. There are four simple principles that I have talked about before and that are in my books which relate to hard work and success:

“The trouble with opportunity is that it always comes disguised as hard work.”

- BELIEF. Believing in yourself is all about being sure that you are going to do what you want, even if others stand against you.
- DEDICATION. It's part of your make-up. It's part of the way you do things.
- FOCUS. It's a focal point that you aim for. For example, the object in target shooting is to aim for the center. The same standard applies for success.
- SKILL. It's the right combination of skill sets in order to be successful. For example, if you are going to be the best on the rodeo circuit, you will have to master the skills necessary to stay on that horse and how to get back up in the saddle without fear. Plus hours and hours of incredibly hard work and a few bumps and bruises along the way.

In my book, Moving Up, I constantly remind readers that it's about your life, it's about succeeding in whatever you choose to do. It's about taking chances, being proactive, ready and willing to put in the hard work necessary.

"It's hard to beat a person who never gives up."

~Babe Ruth
